One day,

the black clouds and the white clouds

decided to have a race.

They just wanted to have some fun.

Their mother, the East Wind, tried to stop them -

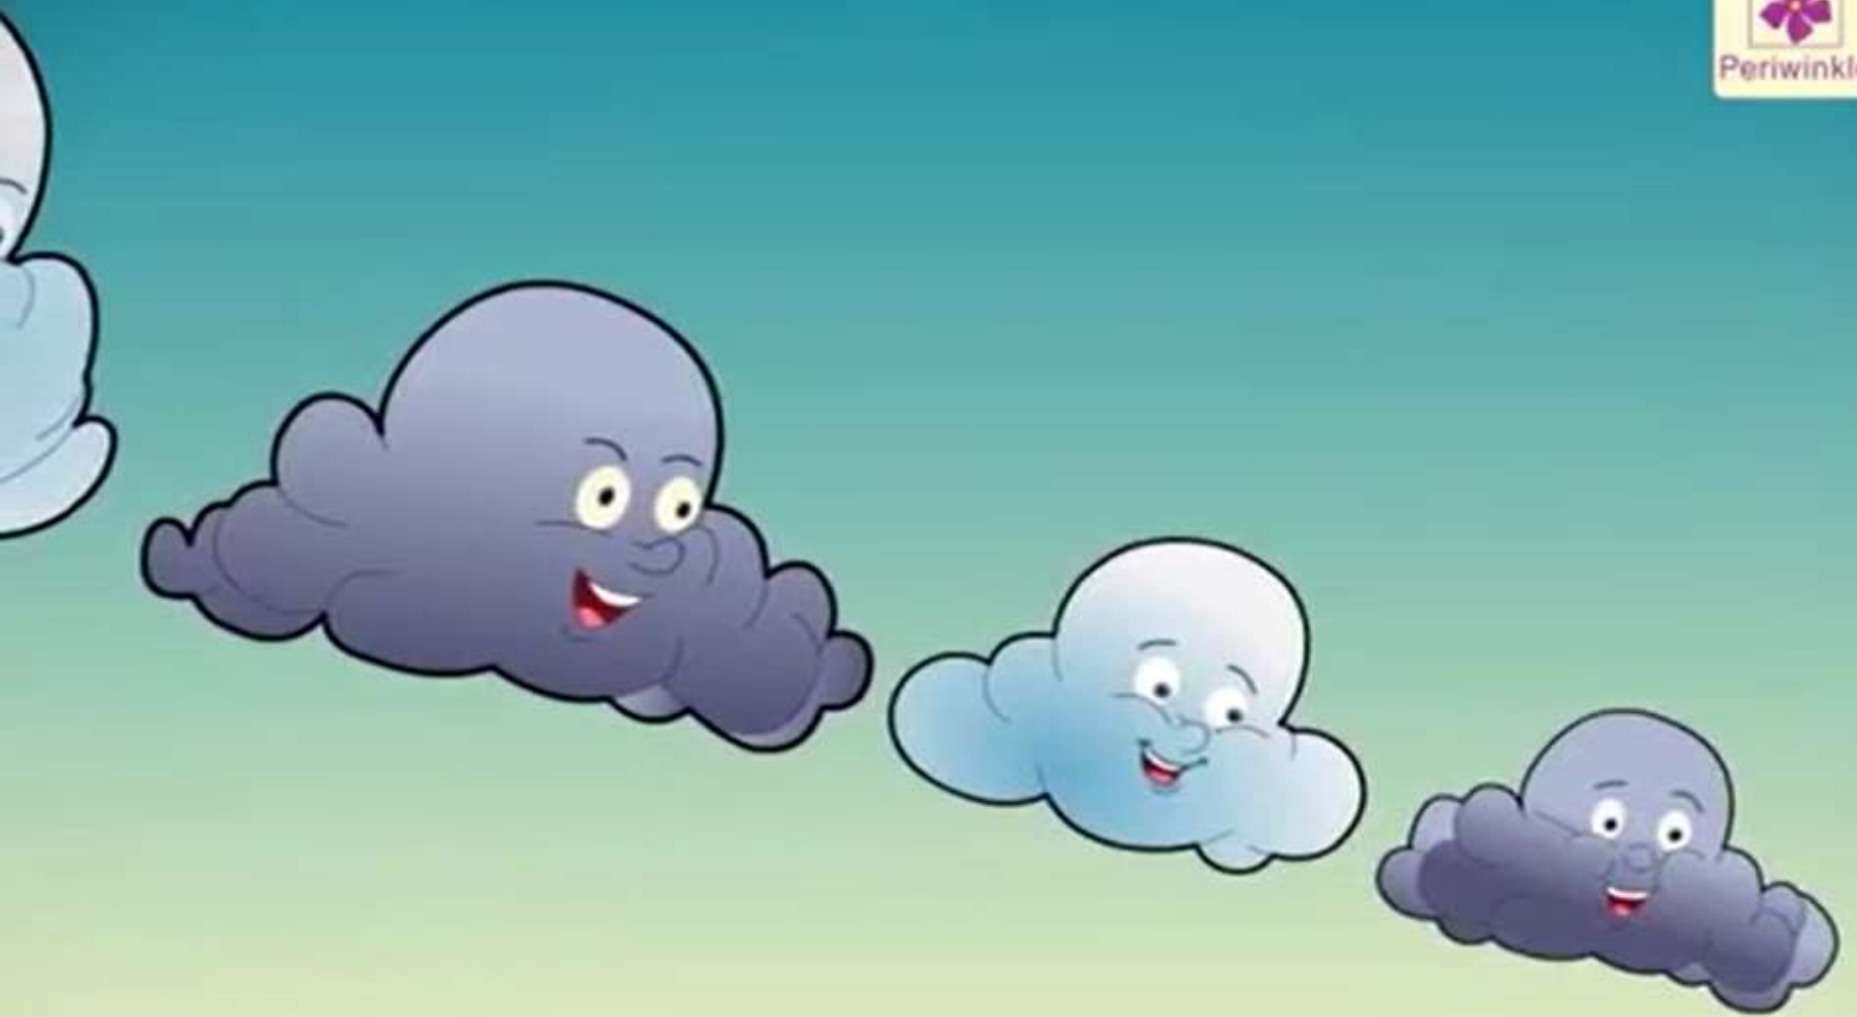

she told them the time was not right.

But they did not listen to her.

They came out into the open sky

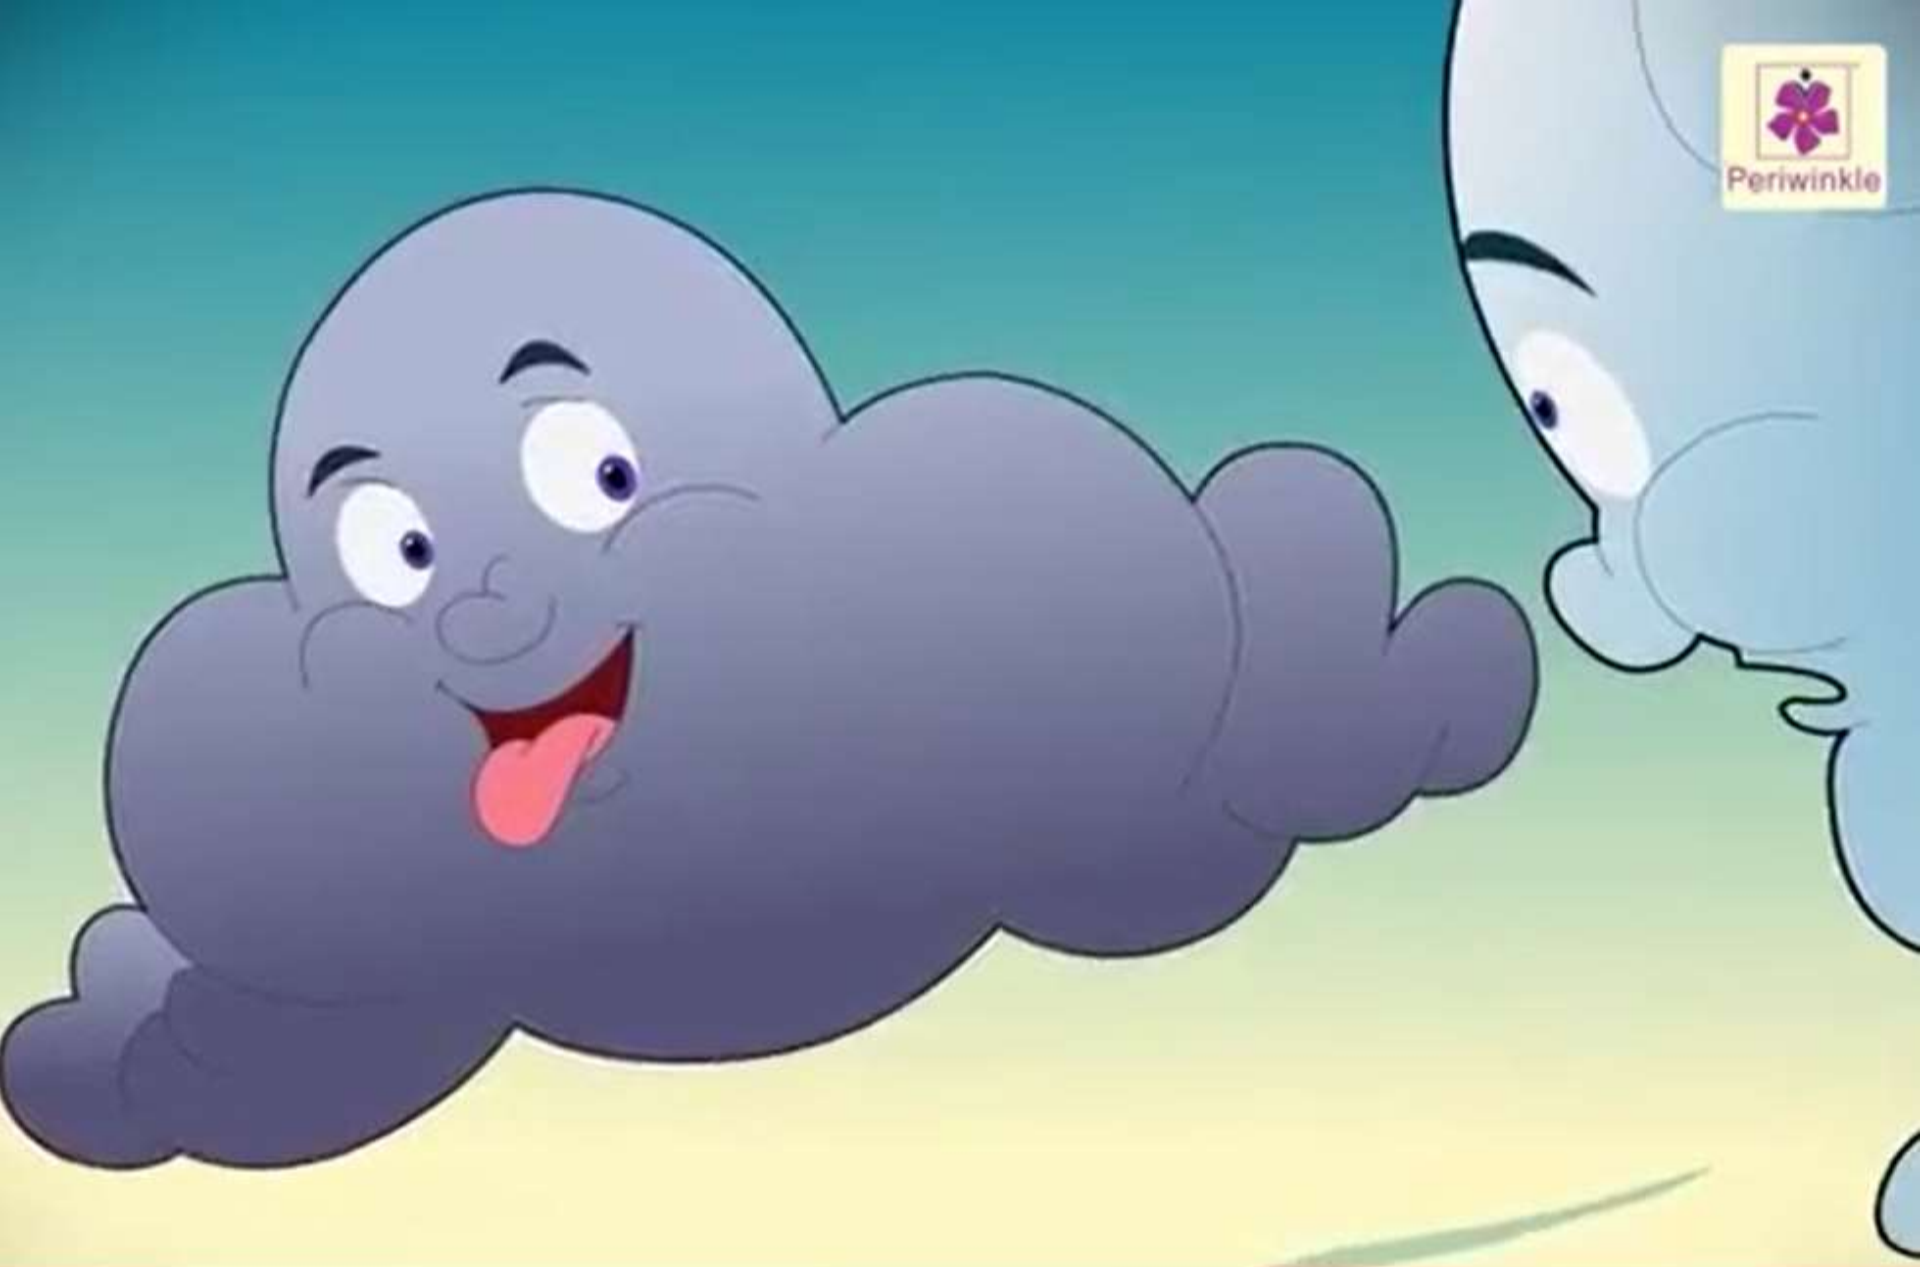

and 1... 2... 3, the race began.

They had a lot of fun - chasing,

dodging,

teasing,

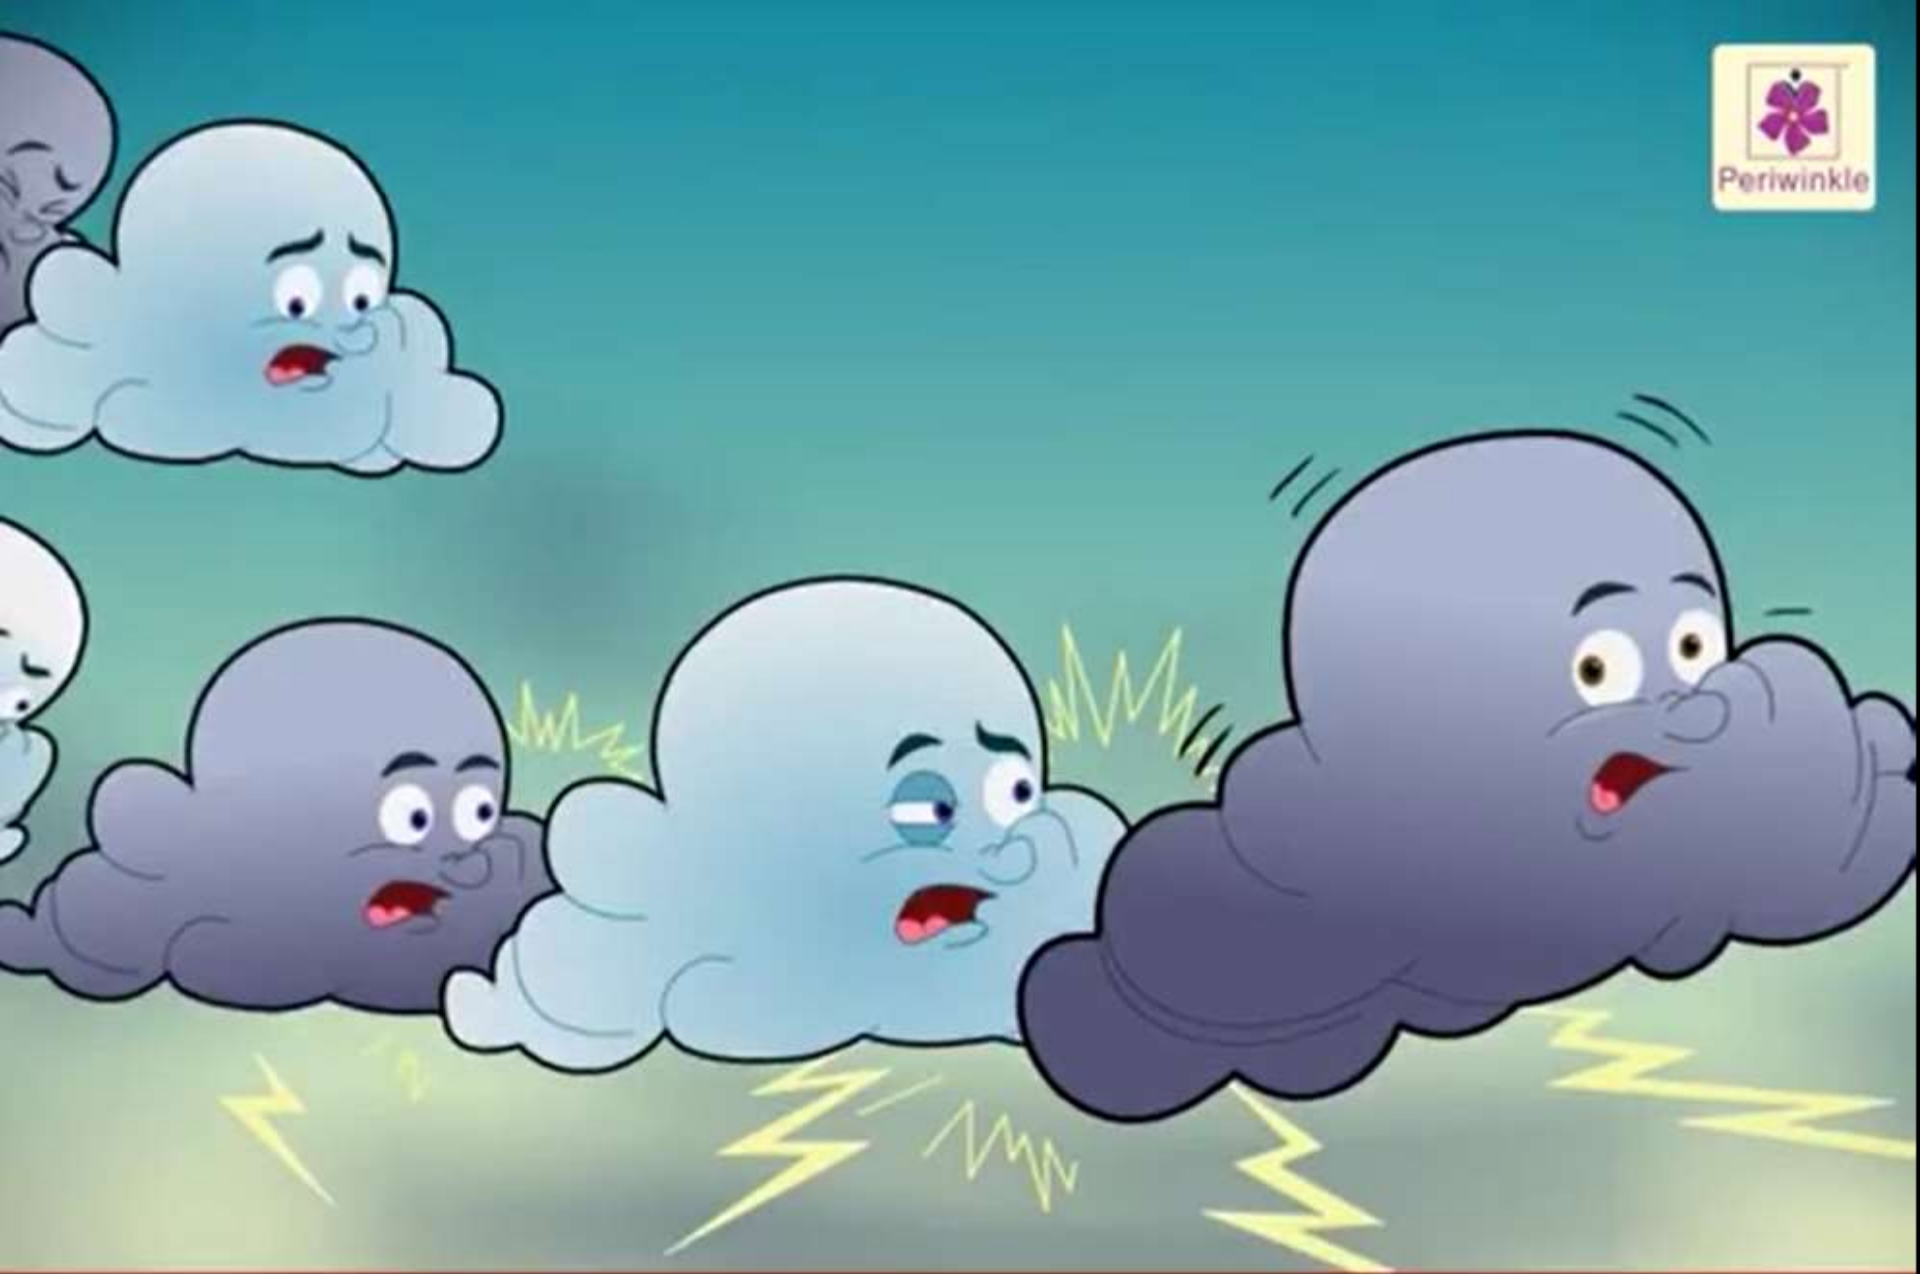

shouting,

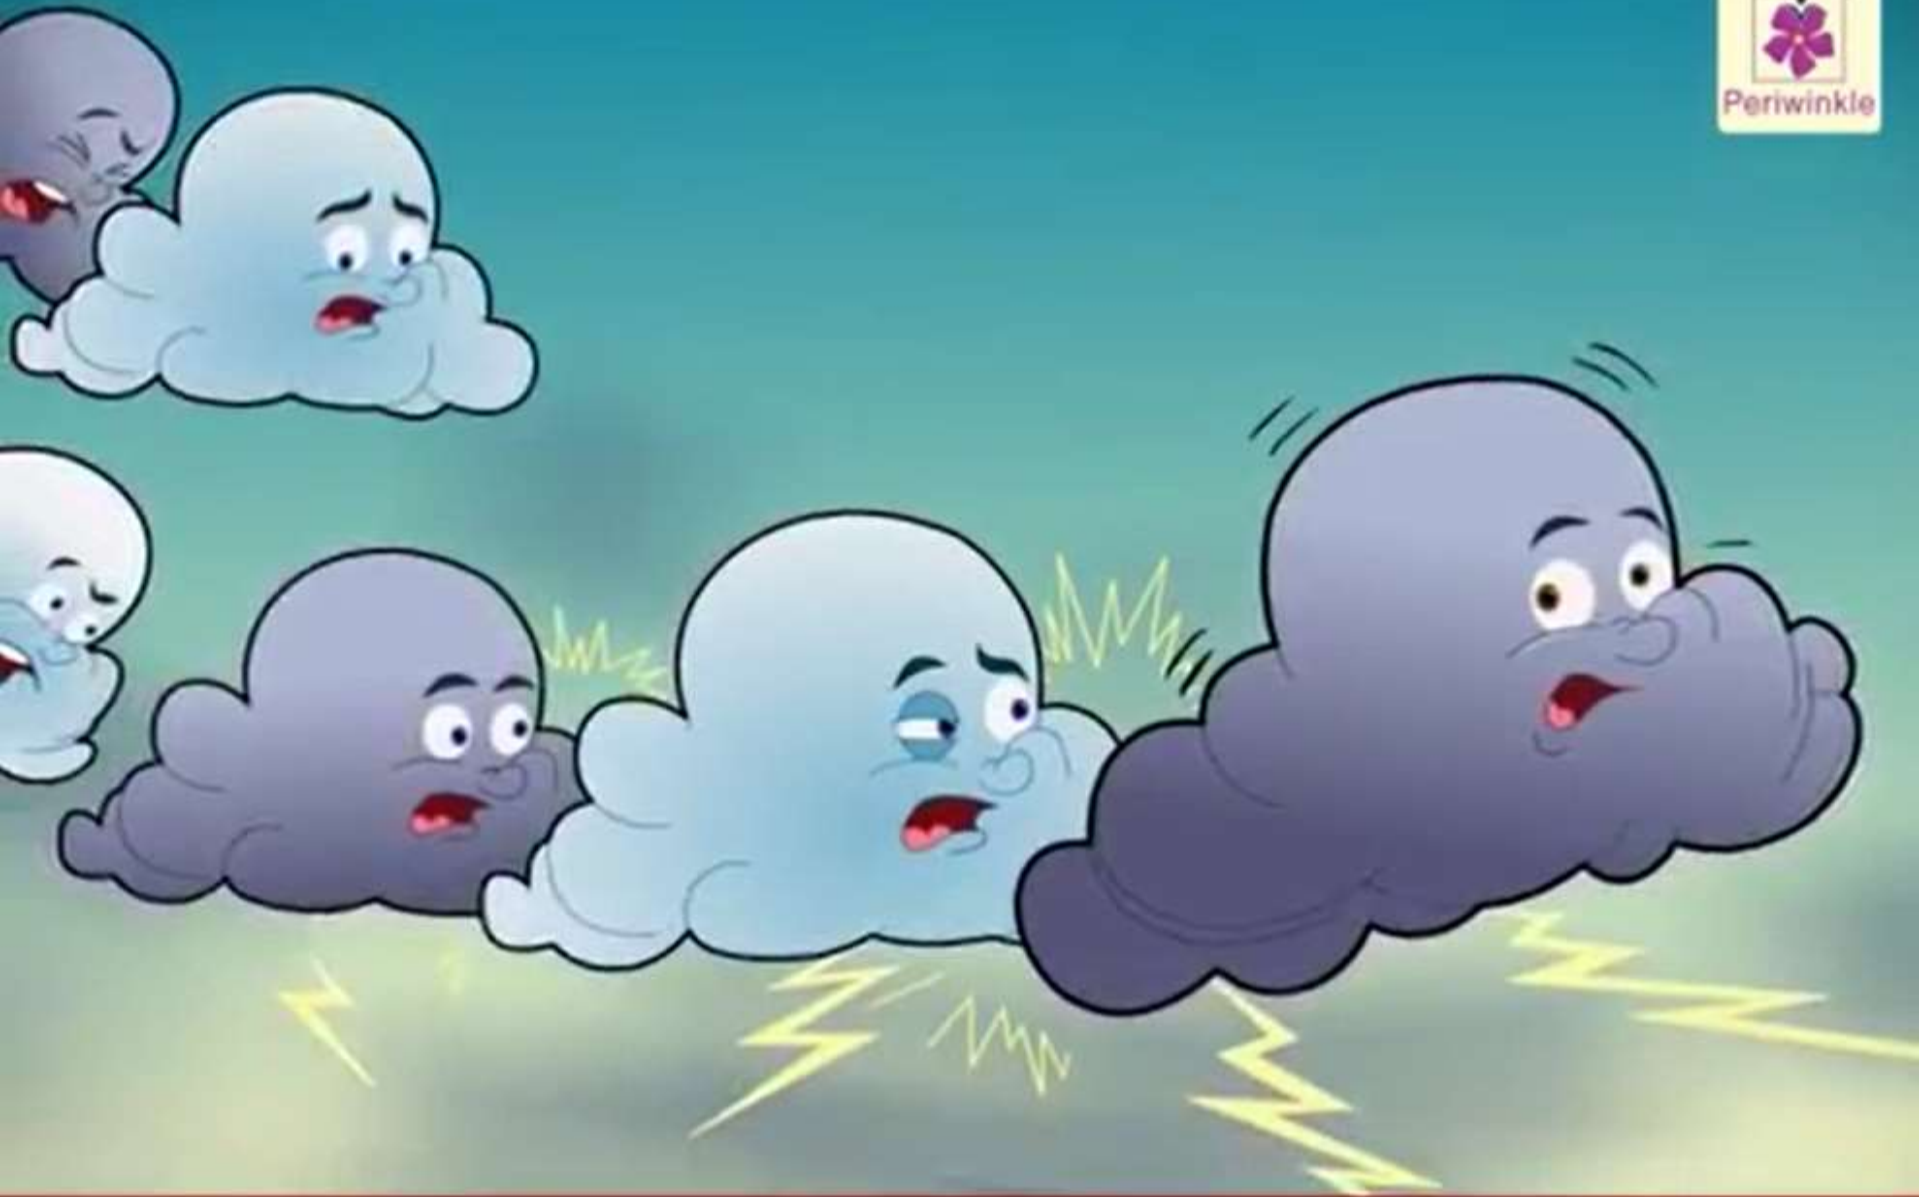

and waving as they raced each other in the sky.

But then it happened...

just as their mother had warned.

The white clouds and the black clouds dashed against each other and bumped their heads.

They began to cry.

Father Sun saw this.

He told the clouds not to cry.

He calmed them down.

He then sent his little fairies to dry their tears.

Seven fairies came - one after another.

The first one wore a violet dress.

The second one wore an indigo dress.

The third one came in blue;

and the last one in red.

They wiped and dried the tears of the clouds.

and soon their work was over.

But their gowns had become wet.

The Sun was shining brightly now.

They hung their gowns

upon the rays of the Sun for drying.
